Summer 2010

Phar 3601: Human Physiology for Health Professions
3 credits, June 14 - August 20, cost: $2,193

This online course is designed for the pre-health professional student. During the course, you will be exposed to the normal functions (physiology) of the major human organ systems and will be introduced to diseases (pathophysiology) in those systems. The goal of this course is to prepare you for more in depth courses you will encounter during your health science career (e.g., pharmacy, nursing, medicine, veterinary, dentistry). You will obtain knowledge about the physical, mechanical and biochemical functions of human systems, including, but not limited to: cellular, nervous (peripheral and central), cardiovascular, respiratory, renal, gastrointestinal, endocrine and reproductive systems.

You must complete all fields with an asterisk (*).
